

With its rich black earth, Ukraine has fed the world for a millennium and today remains one of the largest agricultural exporters in the world. The current Russian blockade of the Black Sea is not only an effort to starve Ukrainians, but to break the world as well.

On the 90th anniversary of the Holodomor, the Soviet-era forced famine in Ukraine that killed millions between 1932–1933, we will reflect on Ukrainian history and the current dynamics of political famine.

Join us for a short lecture and conversation, followed by a reception with Ukrainian food and music, and tour of the exhibition, "Ukraine 1933: A Cookbook."
